first behind the carriage, followed by the Prime Minister and representatives of military and civil life of the nation. Troops of the Ottawa Mounted Police and warriors lined the route. When the procession ceased to move, the band too ceased to play at 11 o'clock.

The thudding of airplanes was heard as the funerals crossed the crowded plaza, at the west came seven comrades of Johnson, swinging in great circles over the city and sweeping down the procession with engines. Down the street a firing of scarlet and gold and bus three volleys. Last Post was played and the Governor General's guards' band played the St. Giles Banner, while the garrisoned arms. The body was through the station between lines by the men of the A. The station itself was in purple and black draperies; moments later the special train the remains moved out, through Field, Mich., as its destination.

It was then that the Spirit of St. Louis appeared out of the blue sky, moving in great white circles as it moved out of the clouds.
